CALL FOR PAPERS

PhD Students Team of General and Comparative Literature Field Organizes an Online International Study Day on:

COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND GLOBALIZATION

Held on: 12th May 2022

ARGUMENT

The study of world literature is a useful instrument for global studies since it covers a wide range of topics relevant to globalization. Literature from throughout the world can show us how information is exchanged between cultures and nations. Globalization, which incorporates all facets of the modern world and brings nations of the world closer together into a single society through culture, economic transactions, politics, technology, and social interactions, is causing a world that is always changing. Globalization has had a great impact on thinking across the humanities, redefining the understanding of many fields such as culture and literature therefore, the impact of globalization on culture and literature is quite significant. The term “Globalization” is tentatively defined as interconnectedness. With globalization it is nearly impossible to stop the spread of ideas. Translation has played a significant role in the formation of world culture, and no comparative literature study is complete without it. On the surface, translation transports or transmits texts across boundaries and allows people to communicate in other languages. It is impossible to overestimate the role of translation in global communication patterns. To explore how globalization affects and reflects world literature, this study day aims to determine the relationship between globalization and comparative literature.

STUDY DAY AXES:

The theme of the study day includes, but is not restricted to the following axes:

1. The impact of globalization on world literature
2. The role of translation in spreading literature

3. National literature Vs transnational literature
4. Cultural diversity in world literature
5. The concept of universality in literature
6. How literature shapes identity in the age of globalization
7. Cultural and sociological globalization through comparative literature
